organisations and third-party relationships, building high performing teams, winning customers and dealing with internal and external scrutiny all draw on our leadership skills, experience and personal resources.

The best leaders are self-aware, always learning and looking for challenge and support.

Gary Storer, Executive Coach

I founded Enterprise Learning in 2002 after a career in people change and organisation transformation, mostly in regulated financial services, including senior roles at Legal & General, Gartmore Investment Management and NatWest as well as four years as Managing Consultant in KPMG's financial services practice.

My passion is helping organisations and senior managers achieve change, whether that's operational transformation, improving services for customers, making personal transitions or being a better leader.

In recent years, I have become fascinated in understanding how leaders can build cultures and organisations which can achieve commercial success as well as treat their customers fairly. I advise senior managers and Directors in major UK firms and have led a large number of successful change programmes to improve the customer experience and manage risk in complex environments.

As well as my first degree in literature, I also have a MBA and a Masters in Executive Coaching. I am a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts and a Fellow of the Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development.

I enjoy speaking at a range of conferences on my areas of interest and have written about leadership, culture, change and risk for a number of journals and online platforms.
